BRITANNIA'S

My Countrymen,

ADDRESS

TO HER

PEOPLE.

BEWARE of that perfidious, blood-thirsty nation, the French; the source of every evil you have experienced for a century past. — During all that period, harassed during all that period, harassed you with wars, exhausting your treasures, and impairing their hands in the blood of your patients or relations, or kept you in the intervals of war, under the constant apprehensions of them. These wars, and rumours of wars, have been the source of all the taxes you have paid, and of the distresses you have suffered. It was France that received that blow to England, which was the second, when he abdicated the throne, and in whole could they plunge us into a ten years war. It was the French who made the last of war and rebellion in 1715 and 1745, and who were the cause of the French that the late civil war in America were fomented and continued; where French and our mixed in common battle and discord, shedding each other's blood. The French, not content (the natural effects of their bigotry to the Pope's faith) whole principles of hate, murder and destruction to all who dissent from their (and Rome's) have at length been taught by the voice of your arms and armies, to abandon their ancient and long-continued enmity you with the more reason respects than an open war.

Britannia's Address to her People.

MY CHILDREN,

BEWARE of that perfidious, blood-thirsty nation, the French; the source of every evil you have experienced for a century past.—Again, I say beware. Recollect, that during all that period they have unprovokedly, either harassed you with wars, exhausting your treasures, and imbruing their hands in the blood of your parents or relations, or kept you in the intervals of war, under the constant apprehensions of it. These wars, and rumours of wars, have been the source of all the taxes you are burthened with, and of the heavy debts you have contracted. It was France that received that bigot to Papism, James the Second, when he abdicated the throne, and in whose cause they plunged us into a ten years war. It was the French who made this island the seat of war and rebellion in 1715 and 1745, to compel us to receive, as our kings, the two last Popish Pretenders. It was by the treachery of the French that the late civil wars in America were fomented and continued; where father and sons mixed in common battle and discord, shedding each other's blood. The French, not civilized like you, but the bulk of them ferocious and cruel (the natural effects of their bigotry to the Popish faith, whose principles dictate murder and destruction to all who dissent from its tenets and doctrines) have at length been taught, by the valour of your fleets and armies, to abandon their attempts of subjugating you by force to their slavish yoke. They now, therefore, conspire against you with far more dangerous weapons than an open war.

They are combined with the wicked part of my people, and are attempting to ensnare you into their traps by crafty wiles, tricks, and devices. To effect their purposes the better, they have given to some large bribes, and have flattered and deceived that old leaven of unrighteousness, the gloomy and malignant Presbyterian, with promises of placing and supporting him at the head of the Republican Government, as soon as it can be effected, making that sect your masters and tyrants. I do not mean in the list of those I call Presbyterians, to include any sect of Dissenters, except the descendants of that remnant who escaped the general exile of the Regicides of Charles the First, and contrived to remain here, or to return after the Restoration of his son. It is by these bribed and wicked traitors to their country, encouraged, if not assisted, by that description of Presbyterians I have named, that the efficacy of our constitution is now threatened and evidently in danger, but by your vigorous and timely resistance, of being overturned; a constitution so framed by the wisdom of your ancestors, and improved by time and experience, as to secure to my people, as long as it remain uncontaminated and unshaken, in the most perfect enjoyment of true liberty and equality, and every other blessing in life.

Alas! that I should see the day that the British constitution, that sacred palladium of Freedom and Equality, the only protector of property and of the real rights of man in a civilized state, thus attacked by vile incendiaries at home, united with the worst part of our ancient enemy on the continent; and to see attempts made to substitute in its place the same wicked system (a mockery to all true government) by which OLIVER CROMWELL, and his unprincipled associates, trampled Liberty under foot, and for a short time tyrannized over my people. For they (as hath been just now done in France, under pretext of grievances that might have been easily remedied in a constitutional way) betrayed and imprisoned their King, sold all his lands and other effects, confiscated the possessions of the Church, turned out the Clergy, and reduced them to beggary and want; destroyed the House of Lords, and made themselves a perpetual Par- liament, and the sole tyrants of the land. Thus it was here in 1649, and thus it is at this moment in France. The French, to gain their ends, will smile and flatter, but be assured death and destruction sit on their lips. Unequal to the bravery of my children in the open field, the game they are now playing is to undermine you. If you doubt it, let their conduct in the dominions of the Emperor of Germany, and the King of Sardinia, admonish you in due time. By their decrees they have as insidiously as unequivocally disavowed all conquests, all wars against their neighbours, all extension of power and dominion; but, under cloak of giving succour to those who ask for freedom and equality, they have entered the territories of their neighbours with the sword, have laid their countries waste, seized the corn of the Farmers, imprisoned the most respectable of the inhabitants, and banished, or cruelly assassinated the innocent Clergy; nothing but rapine and desolation attending their footsteps. Even at Brussels, that lately favoured city of their conquests, who received them as friends—no sooner did the people attempt to assemble for the purpose of agreeing how to represent in an humble manner, the heavy grievances they sustained by murders and pillage, by the violation of the chastity of their wives and daughters, and other enormities committed by the French Soldiers, than their General, disregarding all his solemn pledges of protection to their persons and property, issued his tyrannous Edict, forbidding the citizens to assemble under any pretence, on pain of death. Such are the men, which the wicked amongst you would persuade you, are acting in favour of universal liberty. With them, liberty means ruin and plunder; that is, liberty for themselves, to deprive you of your freedom, rob you of your property, and divest you of honor, and finally your lives.

Their first grand object is to weaken the hands of the British Government, and; having effected that, their next step is, to introduce their soldiers amongst you by degrees, in small bodies, until they can safely rendezvous in arms, prepared for them by their associates; and you will then become as easy a prey to them as Brussels and Antwerp, and like them you will be emancipated. To open the door more easily, they tell you that France is become free, and invite you to partake of its blessings. Yes, France is free, with a vengeance; for all civil government, order, rank, subordination, law, industry, commerce, and civil society, are driven from the land. The son is no longer subservient to the chastisement of the father, nor the apprentice to the master; every man fears and suspects his neighbour. Murder, rapes, and robberies, stalk over the country uncontrouled and triumphant, while the virtuous King, his Queen, and their babes, are languishing and starving in dungeons and irons, and their nobles and judges massacred in prisons, or driven into foreign countries, and their properties and estates confiscated by the lawless plunderers.

Such is the state of France, and without a firm, manly resistance to the associations now forming against you, under false colours and pretences, and by the false names of Constitutional Societies, Friends of the People, and other appellations adapted to catch your ears and entrap your understandings, such will soon be the state of this country. For, through the wisdom of your ancestors, are the powers necessary for preserving order in a free state, so equally balanced between the people and the crown, that the moment any innovation is made, or change effected, except by the common consent of the three estates, and that under the most delicate guards and restrictions; I say, that when the scale shall be made to preponderate either way, by force or violence, from that important moment your liberty is at an end, and those very armies who are now despoiling the countries of Savoy and Flanders, will raise up here to compleat your ruin. In vain will it then be for your unhappy wives and your daughters to look up for aid against the brutality and butchery of those inexorable foreigners, who are equally strangers to your language and customs, as they will be to the calls of humanity and mercy in their distress. Let the Presbyterian of the old leaven consider this and tremble. He will then be the first to feel the vengeance of French bigotry and French perfidy.

To such as have been already misled from their duty, by the specious pretext of reforming and improving our legislature and laws, in order that they may more nearly approximate to the new-fangled mockery of government in France, I will give the state of that country and this, as they lately stood in contrast with each other, that you may see the glaring difference, and how well adapted are our laws and constitution, whilst they are suffered to remain uncontaminated by savage marauders, to all the purposes of happiness, and that they are neither more nor less than what the French themselves had vainly hoped they should obtain by their first revolution.

FRANCE.

In France the King alone made, and at his pleasure, annulled the laws.

In France, the King alone ~~taxed~~ the people.

In France, the King applied the taxes according to his own pleasure.

The King of France raised and maintained fleets and armies at his pleasure, and was under no limitation or restraint as to their numbers, or expence.

In France, the King imprisoned whom he pleased; and, the prisons were kept locked by his officers, so

BRITAIN.

In Britain, the whole Parliament, the King, the Lords, and the Commons, must all assent to the making or annulling any law.

In Britain, the House of Commons give the taxes, and they must afterwards be assented to by the King and Lords, before they can be collected or levied.

In Britain, the House of Commons alone apply taxes to the uses for which they are raised.

In Britain, both the number and the expence of the fleet and army depend solely on the annual vote of the House of Commons.

In Britain, no man can be imprisoned but in the ordinary course of justice. The prisons are in the hands of that no man could have access to his friends, nor was the prisoner permitted to know his accusation, nor for state affairs could he compel either a trial or his liberty.

In France, the nobility were exempt from taxes, and might commit many great enormities against the inferior people without punishment.

In France, for every article of life, particularly for all flesh, fish, poultry, fruit, corn, flour, and garden stuff, brought into the markets for sale, a tax is paid to the government.

In France, no provision is made for the orphan, the decrepit, the aged, or poor persons of any description.—They all become beggars, starve and die. What will then become of the poor, when the French laws prevail in England?

BRITAIN.

the civil authority; no man is denied access. Every prisoner hears his accusation read by the magistrates before his commitment, and he is brought regularly to his trial in a short time; and every prisoner is also entitled to his Writ of Habeas Corpus, that great bulwark of British liberty, unknown in the regions of France.

In Britain, the taxation is universal upon the nobility and all ranks alike, and the laws for protection of persons and property from violence and plunder makes no distinction between the prince and the labourer; and in this the equality of our laws consists.

In England no tax is paid for any one of these necessities of life.

By the humanity of the English laws, every person is obliged to contribute in proportion to his wealth and condition to the maintenance of all the poor of the land, and it is by choice, and not of necessity, that a beggar is seen here.

These, my children, are the fruits of the valour and patriotism of your ancestors. Let me again seriously caution you, how to trust to the visionary projects of those who, under pretext of amending your condition, are for reforming, as it is called, your Parliament, altering your laws, and levelling all distinctions. The condition to which the French have reduced Savoy and Flanders, as well as their own country, ought to be a lesson to you, and warn you of the impending dangers of any innovation or change, not jointly sanctioned by the King, Lords, and Commons, on their own voluntary incompulsive movement.

Are you prepared to change your Religion for Popery? Or take the alternative of burning at a stake, or being hanged on a lamp-iron? Are you prepared to embrace the laws of France, and to become like the peasantry of France, the feudal servants of new masters, accustomed to countries where villainage, bondmen, and native slavery are, and ever have been, the badges of the inferior order? I hear your answer as in one voice, spurning the idea with contempt and indignation. Let me then, once more, solemnly caution you, let me again most earnestly exhort you to oppose, with the fortitude of your forefathers, becoming free-born Britons, the wicked measures of those insidious men about you, and the pernicious doctrines which they are disseminating to your ruin. Suffer no innovations nor changes to be made in your Constitution, your Laws, or your Religion. They are your Birthright, and in their defence resolve to live free or die.

BRITANNIA.
